

Travis Low is a graduate bass trombone performance student studying under professor Matthew Neff. Travis has also obtained a B.M. in Music Education at James Madison University and studied with professor Andrew Lankford. Travis has won several competitions; he has participated in the US Air Force Collegiate Symposium and was put in the substitute roster for the Williamsburg Symphony Orchestra. Travis has had other professional commitments in several different ensembles. He was a performer in the Busch Gardens Williamsburg show “Mix It Up!” from 2017-2018. He has also appeared with the Virginia Choral Society of Tidewater to play the Brahms Requiem. Lastly, he was a performer for the The Boston Crusaders Drum and Bugle Corps, a Drum Corps International affiliated organization. Travis is a committed music educator that has collaborated with several high school marching bands, including the Hickory High School Marching Hawks, the Brooke Point Marching Blackhawks, the George C. Marshall High School Marching Band, and the Grafton High School Clipper Band. He is also a brass technician at the Thunder Brigade Drum and Bugle Corps. Travis has also served as a substitute teacher in the Chesapeake Public School System, and hosted roundtables and masterclasses at James Madison University.