With strong ties to both Trinity and Camp Hill, Johnson is excited to return to her alma mater and help lead the cooperative swimming program.
“I’m incredibly excited to return to Trinity in this new role. My experience as a student-athlete at Trinity had a lasting impact on my life, and I’m grateful for the opportunity to give back. I’m looking forward to building a positive, competitive team culture where our swimmers can grow as athletes, teammates, and individuals.”

Meghan Sloane, brings a lifelong passion for swimming and a strong competitive background to the program. A graduate of Cedar Cliff High School, Meghan competed in the sport for 15 years. She had a collegiate swimming career at California University of Pennsylvania, where she competed in the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference (PSAC).

“ With a deep appreciation for the sport and the lessons it teaches both in and out of the pool, I am passionate about helping student-athletes reach their full potential, and I am grateful for the opportunity to help lead the Trinity swim team.”

Outside of coaching, she works for the Disciplinary Board of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. When she’s not on the pool deck or at work, she can usually be found spending time with her husband and their three children, most likely cheering from the sidelines of a youth sporting event, watching Notre Dame football, or enjoying time with family and friends.
