

National Data Privacy Day 2021:

Examining the States' Landmark Facebook and Google Antitrust Cases

A discussion with consumer advocates, competition experts, Colorado Attorney General Phil Weiser and Nebraska Attorney General Doug Peterson, on the states' bipartisan antitrust litigation against Big Tech monopolists and how competitive markets benefit consumers.

Panel I: A Discussion with Consumer Advocates

Hear from Diana Moss of the American Antitrust Institute and CO-PIRG's Danny Katz about how strong competition and antitrust enforcement will protect consumers, our markets, and the U.S. economy.

This panel will examine how consumers rely on Big Tech and lack consumer choice on critical products such as Internet search and social networking services. In the absence of choice, consumers are forced to accept whatever data usage policies these companies offer. Panelists will discuss the importance of strong competition laws and how competitive markets benefit consumers. They will also cover privacy interactions with competition and antitrust law and how anti-competitive conduct impacts innovation.

Panel II: Fireside Chat with Colorado Attorney General Phil Weiser and Nebraska Attorney General Doug Peterson

This Fireside Chat with AGs Weiser and Peterson will explore how State Attorneys General are working together, in both the Google and Facebook cases, to protect consumers and innovation. They will discuss how multistate investigations operate, how they work with federal authorities, and why they have prioritized this investigation.

Both panels will be moderated by Diane Hazel, First Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust at the Colorado Department of Law.
