Moderator: TBA
Panelists:
TBA

Panel Description: As with other areas where rapidly developing and improving technology disrupts traditional markets, regulatory structures are slow to adapt to improvements which dramatically reduce healthcare costs. Reductions in traditional fixed costs such as back office support, mail order options, computer imaging and diagnosis reduce costs while still protecting quality of care for patients and privacy. Telemedicine is living up to its potential in both the United States and internationally. Doctors are linking across countries for urgent consultations and daily with patients by webcam, email and phone while patients relay vital statistics for the monitoring of chronic conditions. In store clinics provide diagnoses and treatment for a variety of minor illnesses, vaccinations and physicals for customers. Service providers, regulators and Attorneys General can work together to usher in these high-tech low cost solutions.
