

Active Collaborative Training (A.C.T.) Series: Compassionate Care for Families Affected by Perinatal Substance Exposure Using a Solution Focused, Trauma-Informed Approach

Training Description: In caring for and interacting with families affected by perinatal substance exposure, staff often say “I know there is a better way to express my care and concern for this family, I am just not sure exactly what to do, or what to say and how to say it”.

As professionals who want to help and who are committed to keeping infants and their families safe and healthy, we may struggle with the balance between setting clear guidance and providing compassionate, flexible care and communication. Additionally, when we carry stress about families we are concerned about, we often experience the compound effects known as “compassion fatigue”. In this session, we will explore the struggles with providing this balanced care and the strategies to continue to improve communication and reduce compassion fatigue.

We will follow this training session with a guided Question and Answer Session moderated by Infant and Toddler Specialist, Meg Atwood from Child Care Aware of NH
