The Birds in Your Woods: Who, Why, and How to Help Them

Do you know whether your conserved woodland supports all the wildlife that you want it to? Forest communities change over time. As a forest matures and ages, it offers new habitats for some species but may stop supporting others.

Many of Connecticut's forest bird species are in decline, and could be helped by proactive measures that you can do on land trust holdings. This presentation covers a variety of forest birds, and the stewardship approaches that benefit not only the birds, but other wildlife.

2:00 PM- 4:00 PM

A Walk in the Woods: Sharon Audubon's Demonstration Plots

We will go outside to walk, look, and talk our way through several sites on Sharon Audubon's sanctuary land. Audubon bird biologists and our consulting foresters, Eric Hansen and Curtis Rand, will show how the sanctuary has been managed to enhance bird habitat, and explain how we collaborate to develop and implement stewardship plans. There will be ample time for Q&A. Please dress for the weather and for walking in the woods.
