

Interview participants needed for Karuk Cultural Fire and Resources Study

Tony Marks-Block, PhD student at Stanford University, is conducting a study on the availability and use of fire-dependent resources by Karuk Tribal members. Given ongoing prescribed fire and harvesting/hunting restrictions in Karuk Territory, this study hopes to provide information that is beneficial for Tribal efforts to increase prescribed burning and access to fire-dependent resources. The Karuk Tribal Council has approved the proposal for research.

The interviews should take between 1 and 2 hours and participants will be compensated with $20 in recognition for their participation. Interviews will not be audio recorded, and will be anonymous and confidential. Participants may decide after the interview to restrict the use of their provided information

Tony will be conducting interviews throughout the duration of 2017. To participate please contact Tony at: 415.238.1359 tonymb@stanford.edu
