

The Rev. Rhett Solomon

A native of New Jersey, Rhett Solomon traveled to Atlanta in the fall of 1999 to attend Morehouse College, where he earned a Bachelor's degree in Political Science. After graduating Morehouse in 2003, he discerned whether to pursue doctoral work in Political Science or a call to ministry. After much prayer and consultation, he pursued active ministry. A licensed and ordained Baptist minister, Rhett served at Mt. Carmel Baptist Church in Atlanta, GA, from 2005—2008, during which time he was admitted to the MDiv program at Candler School of Theology at Emory University, a program he completed in 2009.

In 2008, Rhett left Mt. Carmel Baptist Church to co-pastor Resurrected Church of Atlanta, a non-denominational church plant based in Atlanta. He served the small congregation of Resurrected Church of Atlanta until May 2012 until the church amicably disbanded.

To prepare for this transition, Rhett enquired and was received into the Episcopal Church at All Saints' Episcopal Church in May 2011. After years of managing a Barnes & Noble Bookstore, Rhett was called to St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Atlanta, Georgia to serve as Parish Administrator—a position he currently holds.

In the summer of 2020, Rhett earned his ThM (Master of Theology) from Candler School of Theology. He was ordained to the Sacred Order of Deacons on December 19, 2020 and, prayerfully, will be ordained to the priesthood in June 2021. He counts himself blessed to serve St. Paul's Atlanta as Transitional Deacon.

Rhett is a divorced father of two beautiful daughters, Charlotte (10) and Skye(8). He loves God, quality time with family and friends, people, ministry and enjoys reading, writing, poetry, music, history (African-American, British, United States, Presidential), mythology, art, traveling, hiking, tennis, swimming, basketball, movies, theater-going, playing board games and cards, and building LEGO sets.
