KNN Initiative Updates | February 2021

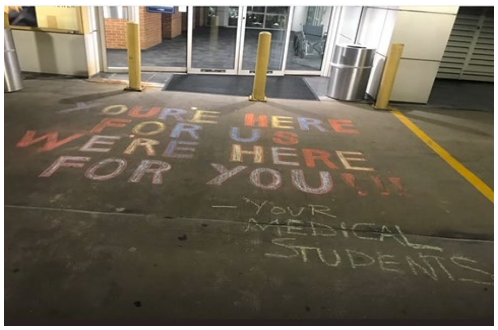

Caring

The KNN Caring group has begun scheduling the Caring Listening Sessions at many of our partner institutions. This project is part of an IRB-approved research study aimed to elicit the thoughts of learners, faculty clinicians, nurses, staff and patients/families on the nature and elements of caring.

Clinical Learning Environment (CLE)

The KNN CLE group shared the work happening at each of our partner institutions to create positive clinical learning environments, including preparations for the upcoming "Thank A Resident" on February 26.

Medical College of Wisconsin shared uplifting pictures of random acts of kindness that have happened recently on campus.

Faculty Development

The Faculty Development initiative has started working on the next phase of the project, exemplar interviews. These interviews will be used to identify themes and later aid in the creation of learning modules.

CONGRATULATIONS to Monica Gobrial, M2, Medical College of Wisconsin essay contest winner. Her essay will be published in an upcoming edition of the KNN Connection.

Professionalism in Medicine

Bonnie Miller, in collaboration with Elizabeth Petty, Adina Kalet and Cheryl Maurana, completed the first of the two manuscripts exploring aspects of professionalism in medicine. The KNN professionalism team also continues to narrow the focus of a future survey to examine professionalism in medicine in the context of today's environment through the perspectives of multiple stakeholders.

Accelerator Writing Group

The KNN Accelerator Writing Group continues to track, consult and coordinate multiple projects including the preparation of several manuscripts, papers, a potential podcast series and a social media project.

Please help the Accelerator Group achieve its goals by letting us know of any manuscripts or other projects in progress at your KNN school, or ideas that you or your faculty might have for publications, presentations or other projects related to your KNN work.

Visit the KNN Website to submit your project/manuscript idea or share those that are in progress.
