EDA fulfills this mission through strategic investments and partnerships that create the regional economic ecosystems required to foster globally competitive regions throughout the United States. EDA supports development in economically distressed areas of the United States by fostering job creation and attracting private investment. Specifically, under the Economic Development Assistance programs (EDAP) Notice of Funding Availability (NOFA), EDA will make construction, non-construction, and revolving loan fund investments under the Public Works and Economic Adjustment Assistance (EAA) Programs. Through this NOFA, EDA will also designate a portion of its EAA funding to support communities and regions that have been negatively impacted by changes in the coal economy (Assistance to Coal Communities, or ACC 2017). Grants made under these programs will leverage regional assets to support the implementation of regional economic development strategies designed to create jobs, leverage private capital, encourage economic development, and strengthen America's ability to compete in the global marketplace. Through the EDAP NOFA, EDA solicits applications from rural and urban communities to develop initiatives that advance new ideas and creative approaches to address rapidly evolving economic conditions.

In Category 2, a TTA provider will work with three sites to develop a model for law enforcement and prosecutors to work with probation departments with regard to high risk, violent offenders. NIJ Understanding the Impacts of Policing Strategies and Practices

Deadline: May 14, 2018

Amount: Multiple awards totaling $3,000,000

Match: not required

Eligibility: States (including territories), units of local government, federally recognized Indian tribal governments that perform law enforcement functions (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior), nonprofit and for-profit organizations (including tribal nonprofit and for-profit organizations), institutions of higher education (including tribal institutions of higher education), and certain qualified individuals.

<https://nij.gov/funding/Documents/solicitations/NIJ-2018-14064.pdf>

The U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), Office of Justice Programs (OJP), National Institute of Justice (NIJ) is seeking applications for funding for research and/or evaluation projects to examine the impact of police crime-reduction practices and strategies on crime and one or more of the following three variables: the safety of police officers, criminal investigations, and/or criminal prosecutions. This program furthers the Department's mission by sponsoring research to provide objective, independent, evidence-based knowledge and tools to meet the challenges of crime and justice, particularly at the state and local levels. With this solicitation, NIJ seeks proposals for research and/or evaluation projects to examine the impact of police practices and strategies on reducing crime, and one or more of the following variables: (1) officer safety, (2) criminal investigations, and (3) criminal prosecutions.

With regard to crime-reduction, NIJ is interested in better understanding the effect that police crime-reduction practices and strategies have on crime broadly including, but not limited to, its persistence over time.

With regard to officer safety, NIJ is interested in better understanding how the changes in officer praxis associated with differing crime-reduction practices and strategies affect officer safety. Potential changes in praxis may include: the amount of time an officer spends in a vehicle or on the street (physical excursion and protection barrier); the number and nature of interactions with individuals (confrontational or not); the number of stops an officer makes; and the number of officers that initially are dispatched to a scene.

Criminal investigations and criminal prosecutions are inextricably linked. The evidence uncovered during criminal investigations underpins criminal prosecutions, but does not alone determine whether an individual will be charged with a crime nor the outcome of the criminal prosecution.

With regard to criminal investigations and criminal prosecutions, NIJ is interested in better understanding the effect that different police crime-reduction practices and strategies have on the development of evidence with probative value (i.e., whether there is sufficient evidence to bring a charge) and how that effect impacts prosecutorial outcomes. Such evidence may take multiple forms. For example, it may be physical evidence not directly related to a crime scene (e.g., drugs and guns uncovered as the result of a stop-and-frisk encounter); witness/victim statements/testimonies or citizens coming forward with investigative leads; or evidence derived from social media posts; etc.

As it relates to criminal investigations and criminal prosecutions, NIJ will entertain proposals for research projects examining outputs and/or outcomes. An applicant's proposal should make a clear and persuasive argument for the output and/or outcome measures proposed.

NIJ is particularly interested in examining the practice of proactive policing and its related strategies, especially "focused deterrence." With respect to focused deterrence strategies, NIJ is most interested in projects employing an experimental, rather than a quasi-experimental design.

NIJ Research and Evaluation on Decision-Making

Deadline: May 7, 2018

Amount: At least one award up to $2,000,000

Match: not required

Eligibility: States (including territories), units of local government, federally recognized Indian tribal governments that perform law enforcement functions (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior), nonprofit and for-profit organizations (including tribal nonprofit and for-profit organizations), institutions of higher education (including tribal institutions of higher education), and certain qualified individuals.

With this solicitation, NIJ seeks proposals for funding for research and evaluation projects to help identify the trait factors and state factors of individual law enforcement officers that may reliably explain their decision-making during encounters with the public. NIJ is interested in identifying those factors tending to lead to successful encounter outcomes; as well as those tending to lead to unsuccessful outcomes. NIJ is also interested in understanding how these factors may lead to different outcomes based on the type of encounter, including understanding how the importance of individual differences in trait and state factors may vary based on the frequency, risk, and reason for an encounter with the public.

NIJ is most interested in proposals for research and evaluation projects that address a wide range of potential encounter scenarios. Potential scenarios include: low-frequency, high-risk encounters, such as responding to an active shooter event or making an arrest; high-frequency, low-risk consensual encounters, such as responding to a request for information; and encounters pursuant to an investigation, which may or may not be consensual.

With each encounter, there are likely one or more key points in the course of events where officers are required to take action that will substantially affect the outcome. How these encounters between the police and public unfold and are ultimately concluded can have wide-ranging ramifications for police departments and the communities they serve.

A unique combination of trait and state factors influences how an officer makes decisions during any given encounter with the public. Trait factors are relatively inflexible characteristics that are intrinsic to each individual, such as personality, disposition, and intelligence. On the other hand, state factors reflect current life experiences, for example family pressures, illness, and/or financial strain. Additionally, law enforcement officers have unique contributors to state factors such as frequency of calls for service, time between each call for service, nature of each call, shift length, and number of consecutive days worked.

With this solicitation, NIJ seeks proposals for research and evaluation projects to identify the combination of trait and state factors that can lead to successful encounter outcomes; as well as those tending to lead to unsuccessful outcomes. NIJ is also interested in understanding how combinations of trait and state factors may lead to different outcomes based on the frequency, risk, and reason for an encounter; as well as understanding how the importance of specific trait and state factors may vary based on the type of encounter.

The Foundation is interested in programs that break down any barrier that prevents a person from continuing to grow and learn through grant programs including:

- 1) Education: Education is the primary focus of the Foundation. The Foundation supports education programs in K-12, at both public and private schools, that seek to solve the existing problems in Los Angeles area schools. These grants for education reform can be made directly to the schools or to independent organizations which are closely involved with this issue. In addition, the Foundation provides funds to private secondary schools, colleges and universities for student financial assistance, in the form of both scholarships and loan programs. Favor is given to those programs directed at talented middle income students who are unable to obtain assistance from sources specifically available to low income students.
- 2) Community, Health, & Social Services: The Foundation is also committed to improving the quality of life in the local community. The Foundation supports programs that encourage all individuals to reach their fullest potential. The best chance a young person has to reach that goal is to stay in school, inside a functioning family, and outside the juvenile justice system. To that end, the Foundation supports programs that deal with issues such as the high drop-out rate, lack of sufficient health care, substance abuse and violence. In addition, the Foundation will consider programs that address poverty issues and assist the economically disadvantaged. Programs aimed at solutions to or the prevention of these problems are favored.
