LEADERSHIP

Dear Friends,

In Boston, the average Roxbury resident can expect to live a quarter-century less than someone who lives a short distance away in Back Bay. This injustice stems from decades of inequities related to education, jobs, housing, food, health care access, and opportunities to build generational wealth. Covid-19 also hit our city's Black, Indigenous and people of color (BIPOC) community particularly hard.

Fortunately, Boston is a city of problem-solvers committed to righting the wrongs of racism. Among them, Whittier is a voice for people eager to be heard. If health equity and social justice go hand in hand, then we must ensure no group is denied access to health care or any other vital resource.

In this FY2022 report, you will read how Whittier answered the Call to Action by supporting patients wherever they needed us. Some highlights:

- We expanded our reach and now operate via flagship and satellite clinics, virtual care, school-based health clinics, four mobile health vehicles, street outreach workers, and visiting nurses.
- We provided 135,000 clinic and outreach visits. Our patients included Jyah, an LGBTQ young adult and proud high school graduate, Angel, a middle school science teacher navigating the post-pandemic world, and Everest, a college professor using technology to manage chronic conditions.
- We promoted economic opportunity through school partnerships and workforce development programs. For example, Gionn built his career at Whittier by advancing from pediatric intern to medical assistant with hopes to grow his healthcare career.
- Our leaders deepened partnerships with public health officials and community leaders to target hot spots and steer policy. Notably, we opened the Day Engagement Center at Whittier, a safe, welcoming place to support our community's homeless people, and the Center for Health Equity Research at Whittier, a community-led brain trust exploring the impact of structural racism and possible solutions.

- Our signature event, Whittier's Annual Toast, returned from hiatus and brought in $1.2 million.
- With your support we finished the fiscal year strong, making it possible for us to mobilize for health equity and social justice.

As always, we honor our staff members for using their lived experiences to care with expertise and empathy. The reality, though, is they need even more support. Our behavioral health and dental care departments have long wait lists, and our preventive care and chronic disease management and social services should expand several-fold. The individuals and families we serve are counting on Bostonians to step up as they always do.

Thank you for believing in health equity for everyone. Together, we can achieve it!

Sincerely,

FREDERICA M. WILLIAMS

“Call Me Jyah”

“Even little kids are going through things. I want to be a teacher that not only can teach but also give kids the love they might not get at home.”

—JYAH BALESTIER

Jyah Balestier

(they/them) is a proud 2022 graduate of Boston Day and Evening Academy, an alternative high school for young people dealing with tough situations.

Just two years ago, Jyah experienced a health crisis and started counseling with Brenda Daley, Whittier's Associate Director of Behavioral Health Services. Brenda met regularly with Jyah to talk about protective behaviors, coping skills, and how to manage relationships with family and friends.

"I have a hard time regulating my emotions, so Brenda helps ground me and decide what to do next in life," Jyah says.

Jyah has a twin sister with autism and feels a heavy responsibility to help care for her. Jyah is also navigating an LGBTQ journey as someone who self-identifies as nonbinary.

"As a kid I used to call myself a princess in pants or a prince in a dress," Jyah recalls. "Then I realized I don't want to be seen as a girl one day and a boy another, I just want to be seen as me."

Whittier has seen an uptick in behavioral health referrals from the LGBTQ community, especially young people. "The word is getting out that this is a place that is welcoming and supportive," Brenda says.

That support helped Jyah get back on track in school and earn a high grade point average upon graduation. A teaching career could be down the road.

"Even little kids are going through things. I want to be a teacher that not only can teach but also give kids the love they might not get at home," Jyah says.

"We are seeing children as young as age 6 struggling with anxiety and depression. A child dealing with psychological issues will have a difficult time functioning in school no matter how smart they are."

The need is urgent. Exposure to violence, substance abuse, and the effects of unemployment take a toll on children and families. The pandemic just made things worse. A lot of our young patients never got a chance to say goodbye to grandparents, aunts, and uncles who died of Covid-19.

As a clinician I am happy that Whittier is a place where families know they can seek help, feel welcome, and get the support they need."

— BRENDA DALEY, MSW, LICSW
Associate Director,
Behavioral Health Services

"I'm proud of Jyah for sticking with therapy. That's a huge strength for them," says Brenda Daley, MSW, LICSW.

A Teacher's Pandemic Story

“It was like, ‘boom.’
I felt the impact for myself but even more for my kids.”

—ANGEL SIMPSON, Teacher

Angel Simpson

will never forget the day her Roxbury middle school shut down due to Covid-19. She was teaching her students a science lesson when a call for dismissal unexpectedly came over the loudspeaker.

"It was like, 'boom.' I felt the impact for myself but even more for my kids," she recalls sadly. What followed were many months of online learning.

Angel returned to the building in 2021, but things felt different. One day in class she experienced the symptoms of an anxiety attack and managed to drive herself to Whittier a few minutes away.

Dr. Stephen Wright was there to greet her.

"Dr. Wright is my saving grace. He came out with this beautiful, soft-spoken voice. He explained to me what's happening to my body and calmed me down," says Angel.

Many of Whittier's patients have complex, deep-rooted health issues that got worse during the pandemic shutdowns. Whittier offers whole-person care through seamless collaboration between medical and behavioral health providers.

For example, Angel received a "warm handoff" from Dr. Wright to Brenda Daley, LICSW, for one-on-one counseling.

"It was easy to establish a therapeutic relationship with Angel because she truly wanted to get better," Brenda says. "She attended all of her therapy and medication sessions and even brought her adult daughter to a session to learn how our family system can support her."

Angel decided in therapy to focus on her healing journey, which meant retiring from teaching one year early. Today she participates in Whittier's Club 1290 for seniors and serves on the Patient Advisory Council. Three of her children started care at Whittier, too.

"I have this big community around me which is very, very supportive. I'm happy about it," Angel says.

"In almost every category—depression, anxiety, chronic disease management—you'll find the pandemic hit our community harder for a host of reasons due to the social determinants of health."

— STEPHEN WRIGHT, MD
Whittier Medical Director

Angel feels grateful to Dr. Stephen Wright for looking out for her health and overall wellbeing.

Telehealth for Diabetes Care

“Given my age and education, I know when something is good and when something is not good, and I’m highly impressed with Whittier.”

—EVEREST ONUOHA, PHD

Everest Onuoha,

PhD, often spots familiar faces when he stops by Whittier for appointments.

For 40 years, this professor of English literature and composition has worked just a half mile down the road at Roxbury Community College. Some of his former students now work at the clinic.

"Given my age and education, I know when something is good and when something is not good, and I'm highly impressed with Whittier," he says.

Everest is managing several early-stage health conditions with support from his primary care provider, Dr. Robin Mayfield. She keeps tabs on his medications and test results and coordinates his care with specialists.

"The beauty of it is that she takes her time," Everest says. "I ask her as many questions as I want. She listens to me and gives me useful medical advice."

Everest is most concerned about his diabetes and uses a remote glucose monitoring system to send data to Dr. Mayfield.

In 2021, Whittier received a $936,400 federal grant to purchase telehealth equipment, including remote patient monitoring and devices. The funding will allow Whittier to better support its highest-risk patients, including about 3,000 people with hypertension and 6,600 with diabetes.

"I find it rewarding to provide top-of-the-line care for people who may not otherwise find it and also help those people navigate a system that is very difficult," says Dr. Mayfield.

Everest agrees, Dr. Mayfield and her colleagues are doing things right. "Whittier is very crucial to the life of this community, to the health of this community," he says.

"Providing compassionate, culturally sensitive care means I get to know my patients personally—where they're from, their home life, and any stressors. It helps me understand what support they need from us to follow their care plan."

— ROBIN MAYFIELD, MD
Lead Physician, Family Medicine

Everest uses a remote glucose monitoring system on his arm to monitor blood sugar levels.

From Intern to Medical Assistant

"Some kids, especially younger children, are very scared to come to the doctor's office. My job is to make them feel welcome and comfortable and safe," says Giann.

Caption to come.

Gionn Gonzalez is a certified medical assistant in Whittier's pediatrics department. Hardworking and charismatic, he puts his whole self into his job each day.

Naturally, he wants to make his mom proud. He also enjoys interacting with kids and their parents and thrives on the center's fast-paced environment and staff camaraderie.

Most of all, Gionn, 20, is ambitious. "I'm the first person in my family to work in the medical field. That's something that I wanted to happen, and I made it happen," he says.

Gionn is a homegrown talent who completed two externships at Whittier before joining the staff. In spring of 2022, he worked a clinical rotation as the capstone of his medical assistant training at Lincoln Tech, a vocational school. Years earlier, he shadowed human resources staff as a student at Cristo Rey High School in Dorchester.

Whittier's workforce training program is designed to increase the earning potential of people of color and the low- to moderate-income communities we serve. Our partners include Boston Career Institute, Cristo Rey High School, Lincoln Tech, Madison Park Technical Vocational High School, and Roxbury Community College.

Student externs gain clinical and administrative experience while building soft skills like teamwork, professionalism, and time management. The program also helps Whittier build a diverse, culturally competent staff.

Gionn thinks nursing school could be in his future, but for now he is loving every moment at Whittier. "Great team, great patients, great providers. I want to be here for a while," he says.

For years, Whittier has partnered with local schools to help Boston's most vulnerable students stay in school and be healthy.

In 2022, our School-Based Health Services Team expanded its footprint by opening a health clinic in the halls of Boston Day and Evening Academy.

Boston Day and Evening Academy

BDEA is an alternative high school for students who have not found success with traditional models. Many are seeking a safe space in the wake of bullying. Others need the flexibility to work jobs or care for siblings or parents. The school has a long waiting list of students seeking behavioral health services.

Whittier's onsite clinic at BDEA is staffed by a full-time team offering physicals, immunizations, screenings, disease treatment, family support and education, mental health counseling, and group support.

Caring for the Homeless

Whittier's service area includes several homeless shelters and the area known as Mass. and Cass—Boston's worst drug hot spot with the highest concentration of homeless people.

facts

Boston has almost triple the rate of people with HIV compared to the rest of Massachusetts, with the highest concentrations in the South End, Roxbury, Jamaica Plain, and North Dorchester.

The people at highest risk for acquiring and transmitting HIV are those who share needles and have unprotected sex.

Whittier has cared for homeless people facing the triple diagnosis of HIV, substance abuse, and mental illness for more than 20 years. In October 2021, we integrated our tri-diagnosis care under one team through a program partly funded by SAMHSA (Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration).

The Mobile Tri-Diagnosis Outreach Team offers rapid HIV testing, education, screenings, and risk reduction interventions such as condom distribution.

The team also connects individuals to Whittier for medical care, social support services, and substance abuse counseling and treatment.

“If you look at national and local data, [HIV infections, substance abuse, and mental health] often happen together and can make each other worse. It is really important to have wraparound services that encompass all three issues, otherwise your work and your treatment aren't going to be successful.”

A comprehensive service provider like Whittier Street has this expertise through their behavioral health specialists who understand harm reduction, medication and treatment to address opioid use disorder, and long-term experience working with HIV patients.”

The Day Engagement Center at Whittier

Launched in October 2022, our Day Engagement Center supports the City's plan to attract unhoused people to safe, welcoming, drug-free spaces away from Mass. and Cass. Staffed weekdays by full-time, trauma-informed professionals, the Center promotes healthy lifestyles while providing access to medical, behavioral health, and recovery services.

Why We Invest in Whittier

by Annette and Dan Nova

As longtime supporters of global health equity, we feel it is important to lend our hearts and resources to the cause of local equity, right here at home. Boston grows stronger as a city when we lift up people most in need.

Poverty, racism, and health inequality are tied together, and one way to level the playing field is by funding access to health care.

A dollar goes a long way at Whittier. Frederica M. Williams is an inspiring, data-driven leader who delivers real and measurable results while maximizing return on investment. The ultimate metric will be to increase life expectancy in Whittier's service area, which is a shocking 25 years lower than in wealthier parts of Boston.

Whittier has an amazing challenge ahead, along with a wonderful, beautiful story that more people need to hear about. We want to help Whittier create a movement, one dollar and one person at a time. Supporting Whittier is a gift to us.

Dan is general partner of Highland Capital Partners and an emeritus member of Partners in Health. Annette and Dan together manage their family foundation.

"Poverty, racism, and health inequality are tied together, and one way to level the playing field is by funding access to health care."

Help Us Drive Community-Led Health Equity Research

Why are Black, Latinx, and Native American people at higher risk for illness and death than their white counterparts? Whittier's new Center for Health Equity Research will explore this question by shining a light on Boston's social determinants of health and the impact of structural racism.

We deeply appreciate Annette and Dan Nova for their generous seed funding. Please contact us to learn how you can further support our research.

The Center for Health Equity Research at Whittier Street Health Center

Vision: To eliminate disparities in health outcomes and well-being due to race, ethnicity, gender, age, geography, sexual orientation, religion, educational level, immigration status, national origin, and socioeconomic status.

Goals: Facilitate improvements in health care delivery and health outcomes to eliminate health disparities due to race, ethnicity, gender, age, geography, sexual orientation, religion, educational level, immigration status, national origin, and socioeconomic status by using tools that empower communities to develop, implement, and evaluate health programs through community-led research, education, training, and advocacy and by utilizing evidence-based data and outcomes to inform policy changes, funding opportunities, program implementation, and practices.
