Are you concerned about the impact of racism on our country? Are you ready to learn more about what you can do to help?

On Race Talk with Lane & Eugene, we provide a platform for people from all races, cultures, lifestyles and backgrounds to come together respectfully and talk about the many nuances of racism, to ask questions, learn from each other’s experiences and share our ideas about how we can individually and collectively make a difference.

On Race Talk with Lane & Eugene, your voice matters! We are committed to engaging people in conversations that build up rather than tear down, and that inspire, educate, and motivate them to be the change they want to see.

Let's face it. Racism affects all of us, regardless of our race or cultural heritage. Hidden bias is insidious, and centuries of racist policies and ideals continue to have a negative influence on us as a nation and as human beings. Our nation needs healing. Learning how to talk with one another is the first step.

Each week on Race Talk, we'll hear from experts, including activists, educators, community organizers, law enforcement professionals, and healthcare providers who will share about their experiences with racism and what they are doing to effect change in their industry.

All are welcome in this inclusive, accepting virtual community. Bring your questions, concerns, and ideas. We want and need you to join this important conversation, because on Race Talk with Lane & Eugene, your voice matters!
