Cody Potts is an Apprentice Electrician at Stewart Richey, where he has worked for nearly four years. In addition to his professional role, Cody dedicates his time to volunteering as the Quarterback Coach for the Warren East High School football team, a position he has held for two years.

Cody is a graduate of Warren East High School, where he played football throughout all four years. After graduating, his passion for the sport led him to return as a coach for the football team. He explains that his love for football and desire to give back to his high school inspired him to take on this role.

Patience is one of the key qualities Cody has developed during his time as a coach. He emphasizes the importance of understanding where each player is coming from and allowing them to learn at their own pace while providing guidance in the right direction. Cody has also learned that some players require more instruction than others, so it's essential to approach coaching with an open mind, recognizing that not every student is at the same skill level. Patience, he explains, helps navigate these differences without becoming frustrated. Additionally, Cody highlights the importance of discipline, noting that being a positive role model for the team is crucial.

Cody remains motivated in his coaching role due to his competitive nature, which he hopes to instill in the players to help them excel in their performance. Additionally, his motivation comes from the opportunity to live vicariously through the athletes as he watches them push themselves further, especially during playoff runs.

One of Cody's most significant accomplishments as a coach is helping the team's quarterback break records, both personally and for the school. This achievement brings him immense pride, knowing he played a role in the quarterback's success.

Cody enjoys the opportunity to be around the team and always has a great time with them, noting that they never fail to make him laugh. He describes the most rewarding aspect of being a football coach as witnessing the growth of the players, both as individuals and as high school athletes, who he has helped develop.

Stewart Richey proudly recognizes Cody for his dedication to giving back to the community while pursuing his passion.
