

Yi Liu is a student in NYU Global Studies program with a concentration in Sustainability, Health, and Environment.

She shares with us:

I am very excited to learn about people's progresses through time and to learn from them as I am also wanting to do similar things. I am also excited for the collaborations and supports. I really like getting connected with people sharing similar paths.

My institution is more and more aware of its environmental impact, and is making changes to reduce its carbon emission. My institution is approaching a change through a top-down, outer-inner method. While this approach is important and could be necessary, I think a more sustainable approach is to inspire individuals to change inwardly. More wonderful is if we could connect the inner and outer change! so that there is a balance, which is especially important for those who actually are impacted by the institution's sustainable policy changes.

Further, I believe making an actual planetary shift is not only a responsibility of the institutions or systems, but more so the responsibility we all share collectively and privately. Therefore, I'd like to inspire people inwardly to make the shift through the platform provided by my institution right now.
