

Post-Doctoral Researcher in Aging School of Nursing

The School of Nursing in the College of Health Sciences at the University of Delaware is pleased to offer a postdoctoral research fellowship for early-career nurse scientists. The position is funded by the Jeanne K. Buxbaum Endowment in Gerontological Nursing. The successful applicant will work collaboratively with School of Nursing and University-wide aging-focused researchers. Areas of research include, but are not limited to, symptom management, cognitive function, physical activity, mobility and falls, aging-in-place, sensor technology, health disparities, and community-engaged research.

This post-doctoral position provides opportunities for presentations, authorship of research manuscripts, mentorship support, and career development arising from this work. Career development training in the areas of responsible conduct of research, grant preparation, data management, research dissemination, and faculty role preparation will be emphasized. Research projects may include both observational and experimental studies.

The fellowship appointment is for a 12-month period, with the potential for reappointment based on trainee progress. The fellowship requires full-time research training.

QUALIFICATIONS:

- Doctoral degree (PhD) in gerontology, nursing, public health, or other related disciplines within the past three years
- Licensed as a registered nurse in the U.S.
- Experience in manuscript preparation and grant proposals
- Self-motivated, detail-oriented, responsible, and team-oriented with excellent interpersonal and communication skills and the ability to synthesize literature

TO APPLY: Applicants should upload a cover letter, curriculum vitae, statement of research and career objectives, and contact information for three references at <http://www.udel.edu/udjobs/>. The start date is negotiable, on or after September 1, 2018. Salary is commensurate with research experience and accomplishments following NIH guidelines. For information contact Lorraine J. Phillips, PhD, RN, FAAN, Search Committee Chair, via email: ljphil@udel.edu.
