

Leon's children grew up without him. For years, addiction consumed everything in his path — his family, his future, and eventually his hope. His world shrunk, narrowed to one relentless hunger he simply could not satisfy.

Then one desperate night, Leon did the only thing he hadn't tried: he cried out to God.

And something changed.

The chains that had held him began to loosen. God started rebuilding what addiction had destroyed. Today, Leon is sober. He has surrendered his life to Jesus Christ. And through a newly planted church in Northern Indiana, he discovered what addiction always promised but could never give him: true community, genuine support, and a hope strong enough to stand on.

Last month, Leon was baptized — surrounded by his new church family, celebrating the new life God has given him, and reclaiming years that once felt lost forever.

Stories like Leon's don't happen by accident.

They happen because someone answered God's call to plant a church. Because someone gave. Because someone prayed. Because someone believed that transformed lives are still possible.

Will you help plant churches where life change can happen?
