

PPL Electric Utilities (PPL) will soon begin important work to rebuild an electrical transmission line on or near property located in the Hummelstown area (see attached map). This project is necessary to improve electric service for neighbors throughout the region and is part of their ongoing effort to be among the most reliable electric companies in the nation.

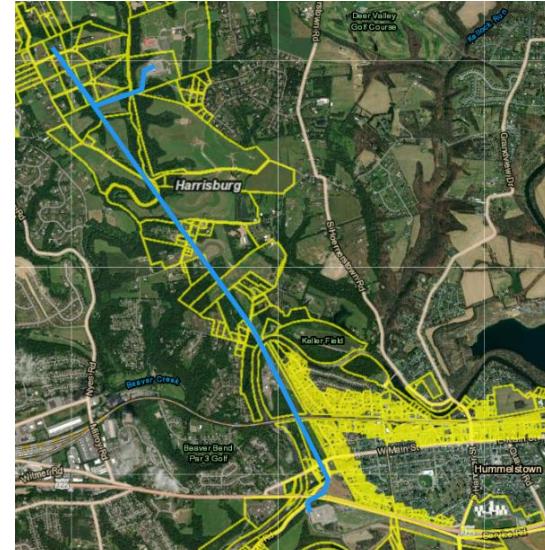

PPL expects the work near you to start around October 14, 2024, and be completed by March 31, 2025. Construction crews will intermittently access the transmission line in your area as needed to reconstruct the line. Rebuilding the existing transmission line will involve many construction phases, including building access roads, drilling and installing pole foundations, transporting equipment to the work locations, pole erection, wire stringing, and finally, restoration of the right of way. All work will take place within PPL's property, easements, and authorized access areas.

Construction will involve the use of heavy equipment and helicopters in some cases. For the safety of our residents, they request that we do not interfere with the field work or approach the field crews unannounced. Please be aware that PPL employees and subcontractors working on behalf of PPL carry photo identification and a business card and are required to show them to any concerned landowner upon request.

The existing transmission line support structures (wood poles and/or lattice towers) will be replaced with taller and thicker steel poles designed to weather to a dark-brown protective coating. The new poles will be much stronger and more resistant to wind and strong storms.

No action or assistance is required from the residents at this time, and we appreciate everyone's cooperation as they complete this important work. Please note that this project will not require an electrical service disruption to your property.
