

Tom Howard, Artist Statement, Spring 2022

The landscape... nature, has been my unchanging muse. Even when the plow tills it, or when the backhoe digs a new foundation in it, there is something completely ingratiating about any little bit of nature that may be left after the carnage. Even if it just produces a few tufts of weeds.

That having been said, the vastness of the American West still inspires me. The colors of the red rock lives with me in my dreams long after my journeys. My art journeys are often coupled with family activities and events. My grown children would chuckle if they saw how often their old man still pulls over for a photo or a quick plein air sketch.

Painting, or making any kind of art, is not for the lighthearted. The real and thoughtful artist does not plant impossible gardens. They don't just sit around waiting for inspiration. Nor do they play at being an artist. We don't just paint whatever we feel like. We work at it each day, finding that thread. Most often it is one of our own making. That thread of thought, or an idea that leads us to new places, and often we don't even have to leave our studios to go there.

My landscape paintings are my escape, if only for a little while. They help me keep a more positive perspective on things, with the hope that in time we will see more peaceful days. In the meantime, I try to say positive things in all my interactions. I try to share the good that I see in life, and these paintings are trying to do just that.

May you have the grace and the inner curiosity to look, imagine, think, and feel as you observe my work. No landscape image is ever just a pretty picture. Each landscape image reflects something about the artist who made it. Each one reflects the force that made it. Each one is more than we know, a reflection of ourselves and the things that we value.
