

April 2017

Trinity Family,

Exciting things are happening! As some of you know I recently got engaged to an amazing man that God led me to while on a mission trip in the Dominican Republic. Planning a wedding and a life together is busy and stressful enough but when the groom lives in a different country and we have to wait until the government issues him a fiancé visa before he can move here, it becomes a little more difficult. I have also been very involved with a global missions organization, leading teams of missionaries to be the hands and feet of Jesus in places like the Dominican Republic and Guatemala.

Through all of this, God has shown me where my gifts and passions truly are and the skills that I possess have been challenged and fine tuned in the process. Teaching at Trinity the last four years has been an experience for which I am so incredibly grateful.

With that being said, I now have confidence that my heart is for ministry, both locally and abroad, but not in the field of teaching. I will not be returning to teach at Trinity after the completion of this school year. I am so excited to see what God has next and how He is going to use my time spent here as a training ground for my next adventure.

Thank you so much for the support and the privilege of allowing me to pour my heart into your children both educationally and spiritually. They will continue to be in my prayers.

God bless,

Jessica McKune
