

Men in Early Childhood Education (ECE)

Hear from the hosts of Napcast, a podcast about early childhood education from the perspective of two males of color, and learn about their journeys and the importance of male representation in ECE.

Mike Browne

Mike Browne (he/him) is the Senior Director of Community Engagement for Cultivate Learning at the University at Washington. He's a New York-raised, Afro-Caribbean, former tap-dancer, and collegiate athlete. Mike brings a unique perspective to early learning that balances grassroots efforts with systemic accountability to ensure we address the social and political crisis surrounding our societal view of children and caregiving that results in the physical and psychological harm of our youngest citizens.

Nick Terrones

Nick Terrones (he/him) is Mexican-Native American, a descendant of the Chumash people. Currently, he is the program director at Daybreak Star Preschool in Seattle, Washington, an early learning program that implements an indigenous curriculum. He seeks to recruit and retain men of color to the wonderful world of early learning, as well as provide opportunities for people to explore and unlearn their gender, racial, and cultural biases through pragmatic presentation and publishing.

Date:	April 19, 2022
Time:	6:00-7:30 pm

Register in advance for this workshop:

Meeting Registration – Zoom Link

After registering, you will receive a confirmation email containing information about joining the meeting.

For More Information: Contact Ms. Backlar at backlanp@laccd.edu or Ms. Leiva leviaj@laccd.edu