Integrity of Creation

Season of Creation Begins September 1

The Season of Creation begins on September 1 with the World Day of Prayer for Creation and extends through October 4, the feast of St. Francis of Assisi. The day of prayer was established by Patriarch Dimitrios I for the Orthodox in 1989, and was then embraced by major Christian European churches in 2001 and by Pope Francis for the Roman Catholic Church in 2015. Environmental Racism: Global

As we celebrate the Season of Creation, one critical connection we should bear in mind is that between environmental injustice and racism. Not only do threats related to climate change disproportionately affect developing countries (in which a majority of citizens are people of color), but negative environmental activity affects communities of color in developed nations much more seriously than white communities. To set our planet free from injustice, we must focus on facilitating environmental justice for communities of color! Check out the New York Times reading list on the links between racism and the environment. Learn more about the disproportionate effect of climate change on developing nations.

Environmental Racism: Black Communities

Black communities in the U.S. have been subjected disproportionately to the negative consequences of environmental irresponsibility. In particular, housing and lending policies have restricted black Americans to living primarily in urban zones. The construction of industrial and waste management complexes are then approved in those zones, rather than majority-white communities, which means that the air quality, access to green space, and real estate value are all significantly worse for black communities than white communities. Read more about the disproportionate impact pollution and other environmental degradation have on people of color. Check out the interactive Mapping Inequality to see where redlining occurred around the U.S. - then see if you can locate the zones that now contain industrial and waste management complexes. Read about Black Climate Scientists and Scholars Changing the World.

Environmental Racism: Hispanic Communities

Climate change is a driver of migration around the world - the Central American migration crisis illuminates this poignantly. Though Central Americans contribute far less to climate change than North Americans, the heavy toll climate change takes on their way of life - especially in the agricultural sector - plays a critical role in the motivation to migrate north. Once in the U.S., Hispanic Americans are exposed to 63 percent more pollution than they produce, while white Americans are exposed to 17 percent less than they produce. Environmental Racism – Indigenous Communities

Whether it's the devastating legacy of mercury contamination at Grassy Narrows, ongoing pollution from the Mount Polley mining disaster, or the looming threat of the Site C dam construction, Amnesty International says Canadian government decisions that ignore the health and well-being of Indigenous peoples must be recognized as a form of environmental racism. Canada's main pollution-prevention law, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, doesn't include one mention of environmental justice, human rights or vulnerable populations. New legislation under consideration, Bill C-230, would require the environment minister to examine the link between race, socio-economic status and environmental risk, develop a strategy to redress environmental racism and report regularly on progress. Human Dignity

Racism, Migration, and Climate Change – Voter Reflection Resource

Using the Leadership Conference of Women Religious focus on the intersection of racism, migration, and climate crisis, social justice promoters of LCWR Region 7 have created three study modules on the issues of racism, migration, and climate crisis for reflection in preparation for the November elections. Each module includes sections on experience of people affected by the issue, values of the issue in light of Catholic Social Teachings, and a call for action. Download resource.

Election and Postal Service

Ensuring a fully functional Postal Service should not be a partisan issue. With less than 10 weeks until Election Day (and the COVID-19 Pandemic still raging), the USPS needs the resources necessary to handle the millions of ballots that will be cast through the mail this election—and the rest of our mail as well. The House passed legislation with bipartisan support. It is time for the Senate to act. If you agree, let your voice be heard. Want to do more? Download this toolkit.

Pope Francis notes, "Situations of conflict and humanitarian emergencies, aggravated by climate change, are increasing the numbers of displaced persons and affecting people already living in a state of dire poverty."
