Retired Marine to Serve as Civil Air Patrol's New Vehicle Fleet & Supply Systems Manager

Civil Air Patrol's logistics team newest addition is Emmanuel Manning. Being no stranger to CAP, he is coming from the National Technology Center, serving as a communication systems technician.

"CAP's core values of Integrity, volunteer service, excellence, and respect are aligned with my own personal values, and I am proud to be a part of such a great organization," said Manning.

Manning retired as a master sergeant after 20 years in the Marine Corps. He is a communicator by trade but has experience in security, teaching, and project management. He holds a master's degree in psychology and has been stationed and deployed to many different locations around the world, giving him a wealth of vast experiences and knowledge.

Prior to retirement and joining CAP, Manning was the chief instructor of Marine Security Guard School in Quantico, Virginia, where he and his team of instructors trained over 1,000 Marines yearly for assignments to embassies and consulates around the world.

Other assignments included detachment commander in Juba, South Sudan; Lagos, Nigeria; and Nassau, The Bahamas; radio chief for 3rd Reconnaissance Battalion in Okinawa, Japan and for 1st Battalion, 8th Marines in Camp Lejeune, North Carolina; and communications chief for 7th Engineer Support Battalion in Camp Pendleton, California.
