Topic Description:

One of the most frequent claims filed by employees these days is whistleblower retaliation. Employers need to be aware of the risks if and when an employee makes a complaint about the workplace. This program will discuss what the law is and what employers can and cannot do. Attendees will learn what makes an employee a whistleblower and how an employer's response can impact their ability to stay lawsuit free.

Linda is an experienced trial attorney, having tried 43 jury trials in both state and federal court. Ms. Hurevitz has earned a reputation for being able to step into a case on the eve of trial. She has experience handling all types of cases including whistleblower retaliation, harassment, discrimination, wrongful termination, and wage and hour claims. She provides advice and counseling to her clients to avoid litigation and has conducted internal investigations to respond to EEOC and DFEH Charges. Her reputation as an attorney willing and able to take a case to trial actually facilitates the settlement of claims. Earlier in her legal career, Linda represented hospitals in medical malpractice cases. This experience has given her a unique knowledge of the healthcare industry and laws governing the practice of medicine. As a result, many of her current cases involve the healthcare industry.
