I believe that in a connected world what is most important is the quality of our connection. I discovered NVC in 2007 while working in private schools. I was struck at how beneficial this practice was in helping repair disconnection amongst disparate groups within the school system and I've pursued further practice of NVC with the intention of distributing this training more widely.

Jennifer Warnick

I work with individuals, families, community groups and organizations who want to make conscious choices about how they live and learn together, and how they manage conflict. I am passionate about creating nurturing, restorative communities where individuals have the support they need to live in alignment with their deepest values.

"I strongly recommend Teach for Life! as a component to any educator's professional development plan. The workshop has served our school by helping me develop and cultivate skills that foster communication and deepen relationships with faculty, staff, and parents. My ability to move the school forward has been greatly enhanced by my experience."
