

To me, some of the most fruitful days in the level 3 atrium are the days I truly see myself as "an unworthy servant" and allow the child and the Holy Spirit to guide our time together. When that occurs, there is a peace that transcends all understanding and a diligence of work. I can sit and be a silent observer of the beauty of the children's relationship with the Good Shepherd and love of God through their work. It's the wonderful feeling that I am non-essential.
