

Canadian libraries and the opioid crisis: Before and during COVID-19

You are invited to take part in a survey for the research study "Canadian libraries and the opioid crisis: Before and during COVID-19" (Dalhousie University REB file # 2020-5365). This study will identify how Canadian public libraries are responding to the opioid crisis in their communities, before and during COVID-19.

To take part in the 20-minute survey, participants must:

- work at a public library in Canada,
- they must work directly with library users, and;
- must read and/or speak English (which is the language the survey will take place in), and;
- must make decisions which directly affect how community members experience their public library.

For more information, and to take part visit:

<https://surveys.dal.ca/opinio/s?s=CanadianLibraries>