Elizabeth Blackwell

FIRST FEMALE DOCTOR

Elizabeth was born in Bristol, England, in 1821. At first she didn't even want to become a doctor. Elizabeth became a teacher, and set up a school because she needed the money and she loved history, the human body disgusted her.

But then something happened to change her mind-and her life-completely: a close friend, who was dying, said to her that she would not have suffered as much if her doctor had been a woman.

In that moment, Elizabeth was inspired to become a doctor she applied many medical schools, and was rejected by all but one: Geneva medical college. She became a doctor followed by her sister and a friend. she set up a medical college for women and helped the poor.
