The Heart Behind Great Out-Of-School Time

Out-of-school time is often where students build confidence, form friendships, and discover what brings them joy. For families, it can be the part of the day that offers reassurance and steady support. At Right At School, we see every day how the people leading this work shape those experiences in meaningful ways.

We recently created The Heart Behind Great Out-of-School Time, a collection of family stories that highlight what happens when programs feel connected to the school community and grounded in care. These stories come from parents across the country who shared how small moments, steady routines, and thoughtful educators made a real difference for their children.

The eBook is part of our Heart of RAS initiative, which elevates the people and perspectives behind great extended-day programs. You can explore more of that work, including short videos from the educators and leaders who make it possible, by visiting our Heart of RAS page.
