Todd McClellan didn't set out to have a career in the ag industry. He studied marketing, not agriculture. But after a brief stint in the aerospace industry, Todd started at Corteva Agriscience – then Dow AgroSciences – 21 years ago as a customer service representative and has been building a career in ag sales ever since.

Todd spent 17 years in sales in Indiana and Tennessee, working to help meet his customers' needs. That's still his focus today in his role as Traits & Licensing Account Manager, where he serves customers in the region east of the Mississippi and south of Interstate 70 (plus Arkansas, Texas and Missouri).

For a guy who grew up in Central Indiana, Todd loves that Corteva is 100% focused on agriculture. "I like that Corteva Agriscience is a pure play agriculture company, unlike our competitors that focus on other areas, like pharmaceuticals," he says. "It gives us an edge."

Todd's favorite part of his job is the people, but he also loves the travel. "I enjoy traveling to different places," he says. "Not just big cities, but going out into the country, to remote areas and places that are off the beaten path."
