As a person with lived experience, both personal and familial, this work constantly reminds me that people deserve more than survival. They deserve stability, confidence, and a choice in their own adventure. The goal is practical, equitable support for real people that includes dignity and respect. Ultimately, the real reason I'm here is that I know what suffering alone feels like and I want to do everything I can to help keep others from experiencing it.

James Miller
Community Mental Health Lead
DMH/DD/SUS