

SIPCW and Project Hospitality have both been working with the NYC Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (DOHMH) on Take Care New York 2020, a project aimed at giving all New Yorkers the chance to live a healthier life. Through this initiative, DOHMH is seeking to equip organizations with the tools to improve health through a series of workshops. This fall, both SIPCW and Project Hospitality will be hosting two workshops: Health and the Built Environment, and Building Just Communities - Antiracist Organizing.

Both of these workshops are free. Below is a brief description of the two workshops and the date, time, and location at which each will be held. Refreshments will be provided at each of the workshops. As each workshop will be presented twice, we suggest choosing the workshop based on the time, date, and location that is most convenient for you. Once you have chosen the workshops you would like to attend, please register using the following link: <https://goo.gl/forms/waxE2e72LLjhMfnd2>

Health and the Built Environment

Did you know that your zipcode is one of the most important predictors of health? The “built environment” of a neighborhood includes all of the physical components of where we live, play, and work (e.g., homes, buildings, streets, open spaces, and infrastructure), and the physical layout of our neighborhoods play a key role in creating and sustaining healthy communities. Please join the Hester Street Collaborative, in partnership with DOHMH, for an interactive, engaging, and informational workshop that will include:

- The role the Built Environment plays in your community’s health
- An overview of citywide processes that impact the built environment
- Current and relevant examples of projects and processes in your local community
- Information and resources on how to better advocate for a healthy built environment

Building Just Communities: A Racial Justice Training for Changemakers

This anti-racist organizing opportunity will be an interactive and collaborative workshop for key stakeholders who want to create equitable community spaces. In this workshop, participants will learn how to be reflective and effective racial justice advocates. Participants will leave with a toolkit for social change.
