Before the genocide, Marie-Christine was happy in her job as accountant, in her marriage and as a young mother of a two-year-old daughter. She escaped in horror, without any luggage, money or document, stepping on the dead bodies of her loved ones.

Carrying her daughter on her back, Marie-Christine crossed three other African countries, on foot, experiencing, not only hunger and starvation but also all kinds of abuse of human rights. In 1998, out of desperation for peace, security and seeking asylum without success, Marie-Christine then entered the United Kingdom illegally. Luckily, after much consideration of her situation, the British authorities granted her asylum, then citizenship.

Marie-Christine was then able to connect with other survivors of the Rwandan Genocide and wars of Africa who had arrived in West Europe and North America. They were all bleeding because of their loss, suffering from post-traumatic stress disorders, culture shock. The people around them, even professionals, who were supposed to help them, had not understood the weight of the pain and suffering that comes out of such tragedy as genocide.

In 2001, after completing her training in Mentoring and Counselling Refugees, Marie-Christine resigned from her paid job as Procurement Manager of Eurostar UK to devote herself fully to helping survivors of the Rwandan Genocide and wars in Africa find a safe refuge. She then founded an organisation called “Saferefugerwanda” with the following aims:

- to help survivors of the genocide of Rwanda and wars in Africa restore their lives and dignity. She has been doing that through Mentoring and Counselling those who are in the West as well as teaching them the Western Etiquette.
- to raise awareness of the plight of refugees: who they are, what they go through and how you can help and embrace them.
- to prevent genocide, wars and all kinds of conflict: “We do this by sharing stories of our loss and the sufferings such atrocities can cause; we then educate schools, universities, faith groups, social clubs, local and international communities the values of love, unity, justice, tolerance and respect of one another as foundations for Peace”.
