The Migrant Quilt Project Exhibition

Sponsored by the First UU Quilters

This month's Share the Plate contributions will help the First UU Quilters bring an important exhibition to Richmond. The exhibition features the art of quilt making as well as an important humanitarian message.

In Arizona, a group of quilters have created a quilt each year since 2000 to memorialize migrants who died while desperately trying to find a better life by crossing the 262-foot-long Yuma sector of the US-Mexico border. The Arizona quilters have incorporated found garments along with the names of those known to have perished, along with those whose names were not known. The project draws attention to the human cost of restrictive immigration laws and practices.

About 20 large quilts with related items and information make up the touring exhibition that the First UU Quilters decided to bring to Richmond. We will host a free public presentation for six weeks in the fall, at the Black Iris Gallery.

While Black Iris is generously donating their space, we have expenses that include the exhibition fee, promotional printing, and shipping the quilts to the next display venue. We are especially interested in hosting the founder of the Migrant Quilt Project, Jody Ipsen, who will come to Richmond to talk about the evolution of the project.

So mark your calendars for September 1 through October 10 for the exhibition at Black Iris at 321 West Broad Street. More details, including volunteer opportunities, will be shared later.

First UU Quilters voted to designate some funds raised from last winter's boutique sales to this project. Other donations are needed and welcome, and we are very grateful for the congregation's generous support.

Current and future First UU RVA leaders—read this!

Special leadership workshops next spring—registration required this fall!!!

- Are you a First UU RVA committee chair or active committee member?
- Are you a board member or in other elected positions?
- Are you interested in growing into more engagement and leadership roles?

Then you have a rare chance for leadership training in an unusual situation—all day with other leaders/emerging leaders from our UU cluster congregations. There will be 30 or more UUs in this leadership series—will you be one of them?

These leadership classes are taught not by our local leaders, but by our denomination's experts in leadership training, coming to us from all over the Southern region for these workshops, which begin in March 2020 on the first Saturday for four consecutive months. Each session will be held at a different congregation.

More details may be found in First News. Or contact Rev. Jeanne or Rev. Sue if you are interested. Scholarships available. Tuition is around $130 for all four workshops—and attendance at all four is required by the UUA.
