Adolescence is a critical period for mental, social and emotional development. Many mental health disorders first present during this period of development with approximately 20% of adolescents having a diagnosable mental health disorder. Suicide is the third leading cause of death in adolescents. Untreated mental health problems in children and teens lead to negative outcomes such as poor school performance, strained relationships, substance abuse, involvement with the juvenile justice system and engaging in risky behaviors

Purpose:

Provide an opportunity for community leaders to learn more about:

- 1) Child and adolescent mental health (both generally and specifically in our community), including prevalence, the impact of mental illness during this phase of development and long term consequences if untreated.
- 2) The challenges of accessing child and adolescent mental health services
- 3) Resources available with in our community
