

LEADING

to a standard of

Excellence:

Not Settling for Services "Just Good Enough"

Supervisors and Leaders who eagerly move into their role with a high energy to establish a "standard of excellence" in their programs can be easily frustrated by mounting pressures in the current environment that may include fiscal shortages, pressures for "compliance" from funding and regulatory sources, the workforce 'crisis', and seemingly ever changing priorities. If not careful the leader who is committed to a standard of excellence for their program and in the services they are providing to clients end up settling for a standard and services that are just "good enough" far too many times for their liking. This highly interactive and provocative workshop will be discussion based and examine the dynamics that can move us away from the desired standard of excellence and suggest strategies to help a leader avoid the trap of becoming more of a "manager" and less of a strong, motivating leader. This workshop would be ideal for current supervisors/leaders who are committed to excellence and are willing to be very self-reflective, and emerging talent where they, or their agency, see them as a future substantial leader.

Cost: $75 per person, includes light breakfast and lunch
