

SURVEY RESULTS BRIEF

Now featuring more than 1,000 initiatives from the past eight years, the PIE Network Member Advocacy and Policy (MAP) database is a go-to resource for Network advocates. The following analysis provides a snapshot of Network members' top initiatives from 2018. Members can find further details, including bill language, campaign resources, candid reactions, and contact information, at pie-network.org/map.

Over the last several months, Network members shared details about their top 2018 policy and advocacy initiatives via the Member Advocacy and Policy (MAP) Survey, conducted via online survey and in-depth interviews with the PIE Network team. The following maps showcase member work in 11 categories: Accountability/Transparency, Educator Policy, Charters, School Finance, Standards and Assessments, Other, School Choice, Governance and Elections, College/Career Readiness, Early Learning, and Literacy.

KEY 2018 ISSUE AREAS

Working to support and strengthen the teaching profession

This was the top issue for the Network in 2018, with nearly 50 percent of advocates reporting on initiatives in Educator Policy. Educator recruitment and preparation initiatives sought to tackle shortages and the quality of prep experiences, and advocates also led efforts to make compensation and career ladders more competitive and strategic. A growing number of Network organizations are working to equip educators with tools to address school climate, social emotional learning, and personalized learning.

Placing a laser-focus on improving the environment for charter schools

Charters and choice work took many forms in 2018, but by far the biggest push has been around equitable funding—including per pupil, special needs and facilities. We anticipate this work to continue over the coming years. Advocates have also continued to push for expansion of state tax credit scholarships, vouchers, and education savings accounts in hopes of serving more students. This year did see a shift, though, with more members focusing on forms of public school choice, specifically around open enrollment and virtual schools.

Implementing ESSA plans and addressing assessment concerns

After last year's work centered around influencing state ESSA plans, this year was focused mostly on implementation, namely around rolling out report cards and maintaining accountability systems. Several states faced major testing administration challenges in 2018, and others are undergoing or considering significant changes to their state assessments. Most Network advocates are focused on holding the line to protect annual assessments and transparent reporting, while there is a budding tension as some, including in Arizona, are starting to explore more flexibility for testing requirements.

Laying the groundwork for future state finance system reform

In 2018, no Network members successfully pushed through a funding formula rewrite in their state. Yet, school finance advocacy remained steady, as 29 organizations reported actively working on the issue more broadly. Much of the work involved laying the groundwork for future reforms to the state finance systems. Specifically, members worked to develop support for more equitable funding formulas, increase the amount of funding for schools, and improve transparency around spending and student performance.
