The MJC livestock judging team had an amazing end to 2018, and great beginnings of 2019. Spending New Year's Eve Judging at the Arizona National Livestock Show, and New Year's Day coming back to California. The team prepared for this contest with a winter workout judging a total of 65 classes, totaling out to 260 individual animals they were able to evaluate. Then watched the Arizona National Livestock shows, evaluating high quality livestock and improving their terminology with terms from nationally recognized judges. Denver Nationals:

The MJC livestock judging team left for Denver Nationals January 14th and prepared for the largest contest of the year for the next three days. The team went to industry leader homes and Colorado State University judging beef, swine, lambs, and goats. Then pairing up with the Fresno State Livestock Judging team then gave multiple sets of reasons preparing for the eight that were given on January 17th. The team was able to judge 12 different classes on contest day, all high-quality animals that bettered the skills and experience of our team. Then, Friday, January 18th, the team did the Carload contest judging commercial cattle, registered cattle, and market ready cattle. These classes consisted of four pens with four animals in each pen. The team had to decipher between the pens and place them based on uniformity, quality, and scenario. Our very own Anthony Cannon placed sixth overall individually for this contest. And, to conclude the trip the team walked the yards looking at industry leading livestock and networking with livestock influencers across the nation. The team was definitely happy with the outcome of this contest and the way the senior team ended their experience for their last contest.
