This year's competition included 165 wineries and a record-breaking 803 wines entered. The competition features 68 classes based on grape varieties and vintages, where the "Best of" wines are selected for their varietal typicity, quality and character.

Best of Show went to Solis Winery's 2018 Estate Fiano, from Santa Clara Valley. This honor came after judges awarded it a Double Gold Medal and deemed it both Best of Class (Other White Wines) and overall Best White Wine. This obscure varietal from southern Italy marks the first time an Italian white wine has won Best of Show.

The Best Red Wine was awarded to Halter Ranch's 2016 Ancestor. This Bordeaux blend also won a Double Gold Medal and was awarded Best of Class (Bordeaux Blends). The Paso Robles winery also won Best Pink Wine for their 2018 Rosé. In addition, the Rhone style Rosé was awarded a Double Gold Medal and was won Best of Class (Grenache Rosé).

Best Sparkling Wine was awarded to Laetitia Vineyard and Winery's 2016 Brut Rosé. The same bubbles from the Arroyo Grande winery also claimed a Double Gold Medal. This is the second year in a row that Laetitia's Brut Rosé has won this category.

Best Dessert Wine was awarded to Glunz Family Winery's Mission Angelica. This wine also won a Double Gold Medal and was awarded Best of Class (Fortified Desserts). This is the third consecutive year that Mission Angelica has been awarded Best Dessert Wine.

Returning Chief Judge Tim McDonald highlights the significance of this year's increased number of entries. "Central Coast wine regions have had to face unprecedented odds the last six years, caught between drought and other environmental strains. This has caused a number of short vintages for the wine community," says McDonald. "The fact that wine entries are up so significantly is quite remarkable. It really reinforces the power and stature of regional competitions."

This year's judging panel included 18 industry professionals with backgrounds ranging from wholesale distribution, restaurant owners, wine buyers and national wine journalists. The 2019 panel included Phil Markert, Director of Liquor for Albertsons, Vons and Pavilions, Central Coast troubadour Matt Kettmann and Contributing Editor for Wine Enthusiast and Mark Chandler, Chief Judge for California State Fair Wine Competition.

"The Central Coast Wine Competition has become a true cornerstone for the California Mid-State Fair," says California Mid-State Fair CEO, Michael Bradley. "We are thrilled that our neighboring communities see the same value that we do in this competition."

The 803 bottles entered were also judged on their labels as part of the Central Coast Packaging and Design Competition. The team of judges consisted of professional creatives from the region, including Kraftwerk Design, Pretty Media Creations, Karson Butler Events, Newman Creative Studios and Studios on the Park. In addition, representatives from regional wine associations: San Luis Obispo Coast Wine Collective and Paso Robles Wine Country Alliance joined the team of judges.
