The "Social" part of our name points to the fundamental core of our political beliefs.

	Modern Liberal View	vs.	Conservative View
Political/Social Unit	The individual is the social and political unit.		The individual is the primary political unit. Family is the primary social unit.

(b) it offers an alternative to the term "social justice" used so favorably by modern liberals, many of whom think of themselves as "social justice warriors" as they work to impose equality and diminish freedom. Folks who prefer ever more voluntary action in our culture could use alternatives such as "social freedom warrior" or "social freedom lover".
