YouthZone's latest mural collaboration with the Bookcliff's Art Center
in Rifle, Colorado

About Back in My Day

This mural explores the issue of the generation gap and the animosity that can exist between different generations. The art focuses on the five current living generations and the accomplishments and struggles that each has had to endure. When we recognize that each generation has worked hard to improve our world, and had to deal with their own set of struggles, we will see that our similarities far outweigh our differences. We should respect each other and work to bridge the gap of these differences. The sphere in each generation is meant to represent the very different world that each generation has had to grow up in. A piece of imagery that connects each world/generation, helps to show that we should come together and that each generation has had an effect on the next.

The mural was created throughout the summer of 2017 by dedicated and enthusiastic area youth, with the guidance of talented artists and teachers, as well as the financial support of the Embrey Family Foundation.

Please meet at the Ute Theater
