DIRECTOR'S MESSAGE

A Word From Our Program Director...

Spring has sprung here in the DMV, where DTEC-TAG offices are located. The Equity Warrior Teams have been actively planning advocacy projects to bring awareness and address the need to increase teacher efficacy through a reflective professional development model. DTEC-TAG aims to equip DTEC-trained educators with tools to build advocacy projects that raise awareness about education policies such as Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA) and provide digital programming to include conversations around social-emotional learning and distance learning, and other relevant topics.

This year is filled with the season of newness. One that will challenge the post-COVID trajectory of education. The Equity Warrior teams will continue to be a crucial component of our execution strategy of research and education at DREF.

Equity Warrior teams have linked teacher professional development with improved student performance and classroom outcomes within enhanced teacher efficacy. Given the increasing demand for enhanced student performance, implementing effective instructional practices that improve the whole child within all classrooms is critical. To address the need to identify, implement, and determine teacher impact of culturally relevant, evidence-based instructional practices necessary for improved student achievement, especially in mathematics and literacy, that address the students and improve teacher efficacy.

Our children are experiencing various educational inequities that have affected their learning. DTEC-TAG will continue to think critically, engage in policy, and provide solutions through our advocacy. I encourage you to join our social media platforms to stay updated on the Equity Warriors advocacy as we elevate EDUCATION NOW! Thank you for your continued support.

CREATING POSSIBILITIES TO IMPROVE LIVES

SISTERHOOD, SCHOLARSHIP & SERVICE

The DTEC-TAG Team has been working tirelessly with our Equity Warriors to support educators across the nation and engage new participants.

This last quarter we were able to support a number of awareness days including appreciation days highlighting School Librarians, Paraprofessionals, Administrative professionals, Assistant Principals, School Principals, School Lunch Heroes, School Nurses, Speech Pathologist and of course, Teachers.

As we prepare for regional conferences and our fall Education Symposium, we look forward to galvanizing a new generation of Equity Warriors ready to advocate for education and those who do the work in their cities. We will be launching recruitment efforts for new Equity Warriors and announcing our state expansion and next steps soon.

We will also be continuing our webinar series, fireside chats, and social media campaigns to keep you all in the know and engaged.

In order for educators to truly make a change, especially in a time like this when so much is at stake, we must unify our efforts. Independently, we are all doing the work, but collectively, we are a force to be reckoned with. And that is what it is going to take to ensure a bright, equitable educational future for our babies.

We must re-imagine the possibilities for our systems. Gone are the days of teacher burnout, lack of teacher retention and educational inequities. Now is the time to force forward and create a brighter tomorrow by preparing ourselves for the challenge ahead and leaning on one another for support.

DTEC-TAG HIGHLIGHTS BLACK EDUCATORS

All year we'll be highlighting Black educators who served as pioneers, change agents, and transformational workers for students, teachers, parents, and academia at large. We want to highlight not only those who have made history but those who are continuing to make history.

Bettina Love is a professor and pioneer, working to establish abolitionist teaching pedagogy in schools across the nation. She is also the co-founder of the Abolitionist teaching network which offers opportunities for educators and parents to get engaged on a social level.

It is the work of educators like Love that continue to push us, challenge us, and keep us focused on innovating new practices that help us ensure we are providing everyone with the best education possible.
