Quality of Life Questionnaires

RadComp participants are asked to complete health related quality of life questionnaires as part of being on the study.

What is a quality of life questionnaire?

Quality of life questionnaires ask about your physical, emotional, and social well-being before and after your cancer treatment. For example, they may ask you about your energy level, the emotional support you receive, and whether treatment met your expectations. There are no right or wrong answers. Pick the answer which is most true for you.

Why are these questionnaires important?

We want to know if and how your quality of life has changed as a result of having radiation therapy – and only you can tell us this!

How long do questionnaires take to complete?

The questionnaires take approximately 30-40 minutes to complete. Exact times may vary. You can stop and save the online questionnaires to complete later.

When do questionnaires need to be completed?

Questionnaires are completed by study participants at specific time points throughout the study.

Your questionnaires will need to be completed at these times:

- When you first join the study
- 1 month after end of radiation
- 6 months after end of radiation
- 12 months after end of radiation
- Once annually for a period of 10 years

We ask that these questionnaires are completed once annually for 10 years so we can track your long-term health after radiation treatment. You will receive email and/or phone reminders when it is time to complete your questionnaires.

How are questionnaires completed?

Questionnaires can be completed on paper (during a visit or by mail) or online through VisionTree at: https://optimalcare.com/patient/
