

The Kaleidoscope

Greetings Everyone,

I hope your fall semester exams went well and the last few days of your winter break are an opportunity to plan and prepare for a great spring semester! The ADI team is gearing up for what we hope is a wonderful semester of community building with each of you. Kicking off the start of the term this Sunday at 3pm with Cocoa and Comfort at the GC (details inside!). We have many other amazing programs on the horizon and look forward to connecting with you, especially those that haven't had an opportunity to join us thus far.

Additionally, I have some other exciting news as we have a new addition to the ADI team...Rayna Truelove! Rayna is our new Assistant Dean of Access, Diversity, and Inclusion. Rayna received her PhD from Brown University in Neuroscience and joins us from the Woodrow Wilson Foundation where she was a Mellon Program Officer. Her nuanced view of both the STEM fields and the social sciences and humanities, make her a great fit for our team. You will find that Rayna is extremely warm, kind, and excited about the important work of building a diverse, inclusive and welcoming environment with our graduate school community. Please join me in welcoming her to Princeton and the Graduate School.

All the best,
Dean Miller

ACADEMICS, EXPERTS SHARE DIVERSITY DREAMS FOR 2019

With 2018 in the rearview mirror and 2019 in the windshield, Diverse asked some academics and other experts to share their biggest wish for diversity, access and inclusion in higher education in the new year.

“My biggest wish is that we can redress the growing economic segregation in higher education, ensuring that everyone has access to liberal education as the foundation for democracy,” said Dr. Lynn Pasquerella, president of the Association of American Colleges and Universities.

Dr. Sim J. Covington Jr., chief diversity officer and adjunct professor in the Department of Social Sciences at Finger Lakes Community College, said he hopes that “real progress is made in the world of higher education around awareness, intention and impact. As the national climate continues to play itself out at colleges and universities across the country, promotion of peace and social justice is crucial in the world today. The American landscape has been plagued with examples of conflict pertaining to diverse perspectives, and colleges and universities have a rich opportunity to tap into their mission of creating a civilized society.”

This year, he added, “higher education institutions should help support positive impact by promoting care for humanity, civic engagement, and intellectual growth. My hope is that in the face of divergent views, civility and respect are the foundation of all interactions, as faculty and staff model progressive behavior for the student body while helping create informed and enlightened citizens in our community, state, country, and world.”

Dr. Emilie M. Townes, professor of American studies and womanist ethics and society at Vanderbilt Divinity School, said she wants to see ” the upper administration in colleges and universities begin to reflect the diversity, access and inclusion being encouraged in the student and faculty populations of those universities.”

STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

Student Spotlight

Congratulations to Dr. Jose Zamalloa on his defense!

Born in Lima, Peru, Jose trained as an experimentalist in the areas of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology before immersing himself into analytical genomics at QCB. Jose's work encompasses the discovery of driver features that lead to cancer progression at the genomic and metabolic levels. To do so, he analyzed large cancer genomic and metabolic datasets in order to build novel statistical models that can one day be used in personalized medicine and the development of better cancer-fighting strategies.

In addition to his research, Jose served as a board member to The Latino Graduate Student Association and joined the Access, Diversity and Inclusion team at several student recruitment events throughout the years. We will miss him dearly, and wish him the best in his journey to California!

Alyship Through Service Training

What is allyship? How are you positioned in relation to communities to practice it? This workshop provides an opportunity to understand the answers to these critical questions and how to be an ally within your service experiences. Through small group conversations and interactive activities, you'll have the chance to explore the ways you connect with communities and what you uniquely bring to each service experience. After taking time to reflect on your personal definition of allyship and what it means to be an "ally" to those you serve, you'll get to practice navigating real life scenarios where allyship comes into play.

B. Ben Baldanza *86, wws

Every organization needs strong leaders who take appropriate risks and are willing to do what is right, even if what is right is not what is popular. B. Ben Baldanza, a Woodrow Wilson School graduate alumnus, chose a nontraditional career path for Wilson School alumni: he entered the private sector to work in the airline business. Yet with the many government and policy implications associated with the nation's transportation system, he never felt too far from what he learned about public service through the Woodrow Wilson School.

At Spirit Airlines, Ben took leadership of a company that had lost hundreds of millions of dollars and had no well-defined strategy. Over 11 years, he led a team that transformed the business, changed the way the industry prices, and created high-paying, sustainable employment for thousands of team members. According to Ben, by taking the company public in 2011, he created billions of dollars of wealth for investors while doing work that was fundamentally inspired by the Woodrow Wilson School – bring transportation to millions by making air travel affordable for many who had previously been priced out of the market.

Today Ben serves on the Board of Directors for several airline and other companies. In these independent roles, he provides value from his diverse set of business experiences and willingness to challenge current conventions when necessary. He is competent and current on modern corporate board governance. Ben has degrees from Syracuse University and Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School, and his academic work was focused on economics, business efficiency, and public policy. He teaches in the economics program at George Mason University in Fairfax, Virginia.
