Life's Greatest Gift

by Roy Stauffer

After being gone from Memphis now for eleven years, I received a phone call last week from a woman who had been active in our church. She said, "I don't really have anything on my mind. I was thinking about you and just wanted to talk to you. I miss you." After eleven years! WOW! And what a wonderful "catching up" conversation we had.

I told her what I've told so many people that if you have a true friend, you may not see that person, or even talk, for ten years but when you do, it's just like it was yesterday. You pick up right where you left off. And the best place, and the best way to develop great friendships like that is by being active in the life of the church. My best life-long friends have always come in and through the church – the church where I grew up in Florida, the churches I served in Tennessee and Kentucky while a student in college and grad school, the church in Memphis where I served for 35 years, and Woodmont.

I've always said that friendship – true, genuine friendship – is life's greatest gift and blessing. And in a world like ours today where loneliness has become the number one cause of death, such friendship is more important and needed than ever. Facebook, Twitter, and all the other forms of social media do not create such genuine friendships. Only personal presence and personal touch will.

Centuries ago the Greek philosopher Aristotle wrote, "Friendship is indispensable to human life. No one would choose to live without friends, even though he possessed all other blessings... friendship is the bond which holds all life together... what good would anything be if there is no one with whom to share it?"

Now there are different levels of friendship. There are "acquaintances." There are "casual friendships" (people you see in the parking lot when you drop your kids off at school, or the people who sit around you at the football game). There are "close friendships and fellowship," which to me is what active participation in the church leads to, especially through small groups or classes. And then there are "deeper, more intimate friends" – the ones who are there for you throughout your life, no matter what.

Years ago I read where one such deep, intimate, and genuine friend in a lifetime is much; two are many; and three are hardly possibly. A survey once revealed that 70% of the American people have many "acquaintances," but very few, if any, truly genuine friends. One big reason is because we get so busy doing so many different things that we don't take (or make) the time to develop genuine friendship.

So, what does it take to develop such deep, life-long, genuine friendships? Here are a few thoughts:

1. Get interested in other people, rather than just all wrapped up in yourself. To have friends, you must be a friend. Self-centeredness is a guarantee for loneliness.
2. Smile. A smile is the shortest distance between two people. Smiles are contagious.
3. Don't be a negative person. Nobody wants to be around someone like that.
4. Make time to be with your friends. Lots of time. It's not, "Let's do lunch sometime," but actually do it. And often!
5. Be a good listener.
6. Accept others as they are. Let them be themselves.
7. Make others feel significant.
8. Don't be afraid to show your emotions.
9. Stick with your friends in tough times.
10. Share what is most important ... the deeper joys and purposes of life, not just the superficial.

Like Aristotle said, I can't imagine life without friends.

Why Stewardship?

by Anne Arney, Elder

Woodmont Christian Church provides so many opportunities for service and joy that I sometimes forget the most basic blessings I receive from Woodmont. Above all else, for me, it is a place for worship, communion and transformation.

I attend services in a safe and comfortable sanctuary. I hear beautiful music that opens my heart and lessons that challenge me to be a better Christian. Each week I feel my spirit renewed to join with others who are trying to live a life closer to Christ's example. None of this would be possible without the support of a faithful community that is centered by Christ. I am so grateful for all that Woodmont has been given and all that it gives back. I only hope to do my part.

Serving Those Who Serve

by Lauren Lucas-Beuerlein

Veteran's Day is just around the corner. On Tuesday November 5, the Young Professionals & Couples ministry is honoring our Woodmont military veterans and first responders with a dinner followed by a discussion hour. The event is at Campbell West from 6 to 8 PM.

We are excited to honor you and learn from your experience of service! Mission BBQ will be our caterer. Not only is their food absolutely delicious, their mission is to honor those who serve our country. If you haven't visited their location in Opry Mills, take a trip down there sometime. They close down the kitchen to play the national anthem over the restaurant speakers at noon every single day and their walls are lined with uniforms, patches, bomber jackets and memories of service.

We've worked with Jan Anderson to identify our Woodmont veterans and we sent out an email invitation to you a few weeks ago. We've been thrilled with the response from veterans in our congregation who plan to attend! If you are a veteran or first responder and you did not

Who Takes the Lead?

by Farrell Mason

We have a menagerie of animals at our house, almost a Noah's Arkful! Our most recent addition is a brother/sister pair of huskies. I confess a moment of Christmas parental weakness. Who wouldn't want a couple of cute puppies around the tree? What were we thinking? Huskies have a lot of energy and need to constantly move. Many afternoons, the kids and I will take them for a long trek around the neighborhood. Inevitably, one pulls forward and takes the lead. I find this a great metaphor for how we humans walk in the world. In any given moment, encounter, relationship, who takes the lead? The selfish ego or the generous soul? In my quest to live a meaningful life, one rich, deep and full, I have to regularly check myself, especially as the world constantly rewards ego performance. Soulfulness demands courage, vulnerability and sacrifice. More than I would like to admit, my ego will slyly slip into the lead. So much is missed, or lost, when I allow this. I let people down, especially myself. But when I dare to approach the world from the gentle, intuitive, vulnerable, I dare say, the divine in me, the experience is exponentially different. Suddenly, I view the world through the kind eyes of God and it becomes a canvas brimming with goodness, beauty and crazy possibilities! I desire to operate from this higher version of myself, good for me, and also for every person who crosses my path.

Amen.

A Walkabout

Always we are given the choice of who we will take out for the day's walkabout! Who will you choose today?

Dear God,

Today I took my ego out for a walk.

*At a fast clip, I could barely keep ahold of her.
She blindly barreled through the endless motions
and minutia of the hour.*

She missed the hummingbird's benediction at the window,

*And the tug of a little hand on her sleeve.
Her glory was measured in tasks accomplished and she relished the world's acclaim of worth.
No wonder she is always out of breath, bone-weary.
Fear has her ear, and can make her life feel very small.*

*She naively believes she holds the reins.
I never hear my ego speak of God and sacred things.
At the close of the day, my ego leaves me wondering what's the point of it all.*

Dear God,

Today I took my soul out for a walk.

*She moves so slowly, not to miss a petal, a whisper, a touch.
She talks to the trees, smiles at the grocery clerk, and brings empathy to every encounter.*

*You won't find her chasing status or over-stocking barns.
These leave her feeling empty and wanting more.*

She is hungry for beauty and love and holiness.

So she follows her intuition (why not use a superpower if you have one)

*And it leads her deep beneath the surface,
Where the Truth is.*

In these moments she can feel the light drop into every cell of her being.

She is convinced the Almighty Plan is good and can be trusted.

Tonight she will dream about all the possibilities around the next corner.

Amen.

Oct. 27: Seekers begins new study on I & II Peter & Jude

The Seekers Bible Study invites anyone who would like to study the books of I Peter, II Peter, and Jude to join them on Sunday, Oct. 27, at 8:30 AM in Room 105. The group will learn why Martin Luther called I Peter "one of the grandest of the New Testament books" and why early church fathers were inspired by its consoling, hopeful words. Coffee is hot at 8:15 AM and the discussion begins at 8:30 AM.

Nov. 5: Author Tony Turnbow to speak at CWF

Tony Turnbow is the author of Hardened to Hickory: The Missing Chapter in Andrew Jackson's Life, a biography that reveals new details of Jackson's first military expedition down the Mississippi River and Natchez Trace. The story reveals a more human side of Jackson than is often portrayed explaining events that transformed him into the man who became general and president. It also tells about two ministers who were involved in his life. CWF meets Tuesday, Nov. 5, at 11:00 AM in Room 105 with lunch to follow at noon. Lunch reservations can be made with the church office (615) 297-8563 or on our Realm church app.
