Contextualized Instruction: Online Course Starts on October 2, 2017

Do your students want to build confidence, develop academic skills and pursue pathways to meaningful careers? Recent research and adult education redesign initiatives highlight the need to rethink adult education curricula to support students' short- and long-term education and career goals.

Contextualized instruction is an effective classroom practice that helps students develop academic skills and career awareness of current industry and sector-focused issues. In this highly participatory course you will learn more about the principles and techniques of contextualized instruction that will help you achieve your long-term instructional goals.

"This course has been the missing piece I need to help me develop a series of reading and writing classes for my students that includes career standards. Everyone has been a great source of information and ideas, making this course very concrete and hands-on."
