Technology is changing the landscape for women and gender-diverse people's safety from violence, and is being used to undermine gender equality and freedom of expression. While the abuse, harassment, control, and sexual exploitation of women and gender-diverse people are not new, technology has created new and dangerous ways perpetuate these harms. A human rights-centered law reform is necessary to address this growing issue.

Join us on April 27 to learn more about technology-facilitated Gender-Based Violence and LEAF's comprehensive resources for victims.

Learning Objectives:

1. Increase your knowledge and understanding of technology-facilitated gender-based violence and ways to support survivors.
2. Learn about digital platform liability for technology-facilitated GBV abuse, and harassment through LEAF's report: Deplatforming Misogyny.
3. Identify tools, training, resources, and practices that will better meet the needs of victims.

Rosel Kim contributes to the development and management of LEAF's cases. She also conducts legal and other research in support of LEAF's work on litigation, law reform and public legal education. She holds an MA in English Literature and common and civil law degrees from McGill University.

In 2017, she was selected as one of the 25 CivicAction DiverseCity Fellows in the Greater Toronto and Hamilton region for her leadership potential. Her writing on race, gender and identity has appeared in Huffington Post Canada, Precedent Magazine and GUTS Magazine.
