As people of faith we believe the care of the environment begins with prayer – which is how we connect with the divine, with each other in our communities of faith, and indeed with all of creation. Prayer sustains us and calls us to engage on issues of concern.

What are your hopes and dreams for the healing of the environment? What are your concerns or fears for the world of Nature? What are the yearnings of your heart for the future of the Earth? We invite people of all faith communities in the Spokane area to offer their prayers about the environment – all of creation – whether prayers of joy and celebration, lamentation or forgiveness, or prayers asking for help and healing.

Interested persons from St John's and other communities will read your prayers as an offering from sacred communities in Spokane as a part of the observance of Earth Day, to be posted on St John's facebook page.

Guidelines:

Anonymous: St John's will not disclose the identity of any person submitting a prayer. However, we encourage you to identify your sacred group affiliation in order to demonstrate the breadth of involvement of the community.

Length: We anticipate that most prayers will be less than one minute in length.

Number: There is no limit to the number of prayers you can submit; St John's may read prayers from each individual before reading a second (or more) prayer from any one individual.

Consent to use: Individual's prayers are considered to include consent to the prayer being read. Any prayers from a copyrighted source must acknowledge the author.

Timings: Prayers accepted April 1 through May 3, 2025 to be read the second week in May, with final date and time TBD.
