For a boy like Samuel in one of Haiti's remote villages, hunger is just part of life. His home is far from paved roads, grocery stores, and many of the resources most of us take for granted.

Getting food to Samuel and the other children in his village took our team two and a half days. They traveled by boat across multiple rivers, rode motorcycles through deep mud, and when the road finally disappeared, some of the food continued by donkey.

Mile after difficult mile, our team kept going for one simple reason: hungry children were waiting.

When the food finally arrived, Samuel received more than a nutritious meal. He received a reminder that he had not been forgotten. To him, the message was clear, no child is too far away to be reached with food, hope, and the love of Jesus.
