MESSAGE FROM THE RABBI

The story of our people in Chevron began over four thousand years ago and is recorded in this week's parsha. Our patriarch Avraham went to great pains to purchase the Cave of Machpeila located in Chevron as a burial site for his beloved wife Sarah. There were protracted negotiations between Avraham and the local populace as to how he could properly secure the property. The local group of Hittites punted the issue to Efron, a prominent figure in town who took over the negotiations. Efron turned out to be an evasive individual who was difficult to pin down to seal the deal. Avraham put great effort and energy in investing into closing this deal as he understood that this transaction would be challenged over time. Indeed, the Jewish People as his descendants have been denied their ancestral claim to the Cave of Machpeila and the City of Chevron. In the late 14th century, the Muslim rulers forbade Jews from entering the site, but they were allowed to approach as close as the fifth step on a staircase at the southeast. At some point, this was changed to the seventh step.

Paul Johnson in his book, History of the Jews, wrote the following about the City of Chevron:

Hebron has great and venerable beauty. It provides peace and stillness often to be found in ancient sanctuaries. But its stones are mute witnesses to constant strife and four millennia of religious and political disputes. It has been in turn a Hebrew shrine, a synagogue, a Byzantine basilica, a mosque, a crusader church, and then a mosque again. Herod the Great enclosed it with a majestic wall, which still stands, soaring nearly 40 feet high, composed of massive hewn stones, some of them 23 feet long. Saladin adorned the shrine with a pulpit. Hebron reflects the long, tragic history of the Jews and their unrivaled capacity to survive their misfortunes. David was anointed king there. When Jerusalem fell, the Jews were expelled and it was settled by Edom. It was conquered by Greece, then by Rome, converted, plundered by the Zealots, burned by the Romans, occupied in turn by Arabs, Franks and Mamluks. From 1266 the Jews were forbidden to enter the Cave to pray. They were permitted only to ascend seven steps by the side of the eastern wall. On the fourth step they inserted their petitions to God in a hole bored 6 feet 6 inches through the stone. Even so, the petitioners were in danger. In 1518 there was a fearful Ottoman massacre of the Hebron Jews. But a community of pious scholars was re-established. It maintained a tenuous existence, composed, at various times, of orthodox Talmudists, of students of the mystic kabbalah, and even of Jewish ascetics, who flogged themselves cruelly until their blood spattered the hallowed stones. Jews were there to welcome, in turn, the false Messiah, Shabbetai Zevi, in the 1660s, the first modern Christian pilgrims in the eighteenth century, secular Jewish settlers a hundred years later, and the British conquerors in 1918. The Jewish community, never very numerous, was ferociously attacked by the Arabs in 1929. They attacked it again in 1936 and virtually wiped it out. When Israeli soldiers entered Hebron during the Six Day War in 1967, for a generation not one Jew had lived there. But a modest settlement was re-established in 1970. Despite much fear and uncertainty, it has flourished. So when the historian visits Hebron today, he asks himself: where are all those peoples which once held the place? Where are the Canaanites? Where are the Edomites? Where are the ancient Hellenes and the Romans, the Byzantines, the Franks, the Mamluks and the Ottomans? They have vanished into time, irrevocably. But the Jews are still in Hebron.

Four thousand years later, G-d's promise to Avraham is still being realized. Let us never lose sight of this gift to us.

Have a peaceful Shabbos,

Rabbi Yaakov Fisch

With Rebetzin Rena Schochet:

Prophets,
 Prophecies, and History

What should we learn from the seeming historical repetitions in the Books of Neviim? We learn about the wars, how we settled and then there are the breakdowns between prophets, judges, and kings? What are the deeper meanings in these seemingly historical, almost predictable, uncertainties? We will plumb these depths together.
