TORAH READING

Parshas Beshalach Page: 366
Haftarah Beshalach Page: 1152

The anxiety one can have about earning an adequate salary to pay all the bills can be rather debilitating at times. Inflation in the United States hit its fastest pace in nearly four decades in 2021 as pandemic-related supply and demand imbalances, along with stimulus intended to shore up the economy, pushed prices up at a 7% annual rate. With the cost of living rising dramatically and our paychecks not keeping up with that pace, it continues to weigh on our minds at all hours of the day and night. Yet, with all the efforts that we invest in this area, it's important to remember there is a G-d that provides for our needs and make enables us to pursue a livelihood. That was the lesson of the manna in this week's Parsha. The Jews in the desert were at their wits when they realized the food they had was dwindling and were likely going to starve to death. Keep in mind, this was before the Amazon Prime trucks were providing deliveries in every neighborhood. One day they woke up and they realized that there was food outside everyone's tent. This was the Manna from heaven. Moshe told the people that this must be remembered for all of the time. If we are not receiving the Manna every morning at our doorstep with the newspaper that's delivered, in what way can it be remembered?

Many times we might think if only there were fewer restrictions in Judaism our careers and livelihood might be more lucrative. The lesson of the manna should debunk that notion. Yes, we must not take anything for granted and work hard to yield that elusive paycheck. However, it is because of the grace of G-d that we are empowered to do just that. Compromising on Mitzvos or on our value system is not going to be more rewarding in this area. The next time we have doubts on this issue, it would be worthwhile to remember the lesson of the manna.

Another weekly portion! The Torah reading cycle begins every year on Simchas Torah, and we hear the same stories in the Book of Bereshis. Avraham has his test of the Akeida, Yitzchak has his struggles, and Yaakov is running for his life from his brother who wants to kill him. If we all know this narrative from past years, how are the messages from the parsha still compelling and relevant? Please join us for a fascinating Parsha discussion and rediscover the deeper messages of the weekly portion that you undoubtedly will find most compelling and relevant.

Kabbalah Versus Magic

WITH RABBI AVI FEIGENBAUM

Many people wonder about the authenticity of Kabbalah, about whether or not it offers a way to circumvent the strictures of adhering to a Torah lifestyle, and whether or not it is indeed a real part of the Jewish tradition. In this series, we will attempt to define Kabbalah, its authenticity, and the prerequisites for its study. The class also discusses how the revealed Torah offers tremendous depth and opportunity for personal and spiritual development without the study of Kabbalah.
